Fighting Spirit of Boston Braves Wins Admiration of Enthusiasts

The splendid work of the Boston Braves during the past few weeks has won the admiration of fans and baseball men generally. The Braves' fighting spirit—Rudolph, James and Ty Cobb—have come in for a lot of praise, as well as Gowdy behind the bat.

Evers and Maranyville. In a recent interview Hugh Jennings, thrice manager of an American league pennant winner, prophesied that the Athletics would have no walkaway when they tackle the Braves in the world's series.

"A month ago," said the Detroit leader, "I would have been willing to wager that the Athletics stood a good chance of winning four straight, or at least capturing the series inside of five games. But I have changed my mind to a certain extent. During the last month, the Braves have won so many games in the ninth or extra innings that they must, in my opinion, be a class for one of the best indications of a team's strength is its ability to win the airtight games that are not decided until the finish.

"They say the Braves have only one 300 hitter. What of that? Didn't the White Sox win the American league pennant in 1905 without a 300 hitter and then go in and win the world's championship? Perhaps Conolly is the only 300 hitter but nevertheless, still, he has a dangerous bunch of pitchers, men who are there in the pinchers. In winning baseball games, the batter who can hit with a man on third is far more valuable than the man who will get two or three hits with no one on and pop up a little fly when the bases are occupied.

"A club could not show the game-ness of the Braves without having pitchers of class, players who have a right to be considered with the real heroes of the game. We all know that Johnny Evers is a great player. From what I have learned, Maranyville is just such a man. Gowdy's work speaks for itself. No catcher could go in day after day and hold up the pitchers in the tight games they have had without being a shrewd and hard-hitting batsman. There are Schmidt and Smith, first and third basemen. They have fitted in superbly.

"So much for the optimistic view of the situation from a Boston standpoint. Here is the dark side. Boston may not win the pennant until the last day of the season. It has only a slight lead over the Giants and the two clubs are to come together for five games in the next four days of the campaign. Neither Giants nor Braves may have a lead of more than a game or so when the crucial series starts. Consequently, Stallings will be enforced to call upon his three star pitchers, Rudolph, James and Tyler, to pitch all five games while McGraw will have to use Mathewson and Tessaun in four of the games. The rest of the players will be all lined up and the strain may be too much for them. On the other hand, the Athletics now have such a lead that they can breeze through without any trouble, just keeping on edge and going in to the world's series perfectly fit, mentally and physically.

The question as to what is the best pose at bat has been discussed by some of our leading hitters. Ty Cobb, who ought to have an idea or two on the subject, says that the most sensible way is to take a perfectly natural pose and you'll get the best results. Stand right up straight and swing on the well-known Dutchman declares that a crouch at the bat gives the batter an advantage and this is the only way to get a good line on the ball. It is true that some of the 300 hitters lean somewhat toward Cobb's idea in this matter. A great part of them select an erect and easy attitude and seem to get the best results. In fact, most enlightened opinion argues that the erect posture is preferable to the crouch. Some seasons ago, a young man named George Stone set some league records with his batting for the St. Louis Browns. In his second or third season he injured his back, which slackened his speed, and affected his batting average. He seemed to be a natural hitter, but he crouched at bat. Many believe he would be able to correct his form at the plate. The crouch over the plate hampers a batter's movements and it has been noticed that the best batters are usually the most graceful.

Those who regard 13 as unlucky will be annoyed to learn that the number 13 has been with the Boston Braves all season. George Stallings somehow doesn't feel that 13 is unlucky at all. James G. Caffrey, president of the club, has thirteen in his name. Johnny Evers was bought by the Braves on January 13 and played his first game with them thirteen weeks later. The team started their first climb in the league last week of the season. Also they played the Giants the 13th scheduled game between the two clubs on August 13. Which looks like enough thirteen to put the fix after any team in good earnest. The Braves however, seem to have grown fat and prospered on it.

Clarence Berger, a recruit from the Virginia league, was recently purchased by the Pirates for $2,500. The highest price ever paid for a player from that organization. Berger is said to be a very speedy and promising young outfielder with a power way of behaving with his bat.

The yarn about George Stallings telling, 'Her you bonehead, get up there and bat,' and five of his players jumping for bats at one time, recalls Jim Sheppard's quick slam at an umpire. Sheppard was at bat when some one on the bench yelled, 'You're whelped, 46 to 0. For the first time since 1890, Purdue will be missing from the orange and blue card. Wisconsin was given Purdue's place on the schedule. The 1914 program follows:

TY COBB CLINCHES TITLE IN BATTING

Detroit Slugger Can Hit the Ball as Butcher Boys—Erwin Leads the Nationals.

[By Associated Press.]

Chicago, Sept. 19.—Ty Cobb, the slugging Georgian of the Detroit club, battled himself to the front during the last week according to figures published here today. He is now leading his nearest rival by 27 points and at the rate he is going at present there is little likelihood of his being headed. The averages as published here show eleven hitters in the 300 class. They are Cobb, Detroit, 375; E. Collins, Philadelphia, 348; Jackson, Cleveland, 347; Hobitzell, Boston, 347; Speaker, Boston, 328; Cree, New York, 327; Crawford, Detroit, 321; Baker, Philadelphia, 319; McInnis, Philadelphia, 316; Walker, St. Louis, 307; M. Mitchell, Washington, 306.

Philadelphia and Detroit continue to lead the league in club batting with figures of 270 and 255. The home run king with 17, while the honors for base stealing go to G. Burns of New York, who has 52.

American League pitchers who lead their league are: Bender, Philadelphia, with 15 and 3; Leonard, Boston, 19 and 5; Plank, Philadelphia, 15 and 6.

The Boston club of the National league has the leading pitcher. He is James, with 24 and 6. Rudolph, his team mate, is next with 22 and 8, while Doak of St. Louis is third with 16 and 7.

Manager Bill Hinchman of Columbus remains at the head of the bat- ters in the American association with 364, closely followed by Kille of Cleveland with 348. Then comes T. us, Kansas City, with 345; Killifer, Minneapolis, 334; Althizer, Minneapolis, 339; Griffith, Indianapolis, 335; Rath, Kansas City, 332; Lake, Buffalo, 324; Hecker, Philadelphia, 322; Wheat, Brooklyn, C. NOW COMES THE SEASON WHEN THE HUNTER IS IMPATIENT TO GET OUT INTO THE OPEN.

Now that the scum has blown off the old mill pond, the mornings are crisp and cool; the man who loves the out-of-doors, his pipe and gun, is impatient to be away to the open spaces where he can try for the wily mallard or swift winged teal. How about it, brother, have you the fever too?

CHINA IS NOW A RIVAL OF RENO FOR DIVORCES

Shanghai, August 15.—American citizens residing in China may now obtain divorces there. The necessity of citizens of the United States residing in China taking a ten thousand mile trip to a state court in order to institute divorce proceedings has been ob- vated by what is considered one of the most important decisions handed down in the United States Court for China. The decision, made recently here by Judge Chas. S. Lobinger in the case of Tahmin Hashimoto Cava- nagh vs. S. D. Worden overrules that of the former judge who had declared the court—which ranks as a United States District Court—lacked jurisdic- tion. The new judge granted a decree of divorce to the plaintiff, the first since the founding of the court. His decision is based upon the case of Biddle vs. the United States, October 28, 1907, which held that the United States Court for China could go to legis- lation which Congress had enacted for Alaska and the District of Colum- bia and assume the same jurisdiction as granted by Congress to courts in these territories.

OUR SATURDAY NIGHT.

Even the Balkans were represented in that soldier-like ship, in the shape of a tall, soldierlike Bulgarian with a heavy mustache and the eyes of a kindly and highly intelligent hawk. He was going back home to fight. "Yes, to fight," "What service?" asked someone. "I am going to the Balkans," he replied. "What service?" asked someone. "I am going to the Balkans," he replied. "What service?" asked someone. "I am going to the Balkans," he replied.

This man had done newspaper work in Russia and America, and studied at Harvard. He spoke better English than most Americans, and he talked about our society generally, often with that peculiarly penetrating and unconventional point of view one feels in Russian literature.

I asked if, with Serbia engaged on the west, Bulgaria might not try to win back what she felt had been wrongly taken from her. "That was the popular notion," said he, "but I assume they are even taking it over in the coffee houses at home—I doubt if any well-informed Bulgarian takes such an idea seriously. We should consider not losing what we already have rather than getting anything more just now."

He talked of Mexico, Wilson, and Roosevelt. It was a pity, he said, and the result of the comparative lack of critical spirit in America that Mr. Roosevelt had been permitted to enjoy his popularity so long. There were party papers mechanically printing their praise or blame—"and then, of course, there's the New York 'Evening Post' and the Springfield 'Republican'—but no general intelligent criticism for a popular hero to meet and answer. He had tried to make something out of Mr. Roosevelt's Pittsburg speech, but didn't believe any one could do it. The man had no definite constructive program—only good normal impulses plus vitality.

"On the whole, he is a good influence—but in place of something that ought to be better. Could he lose his popularity, be attacked on all sides bitterly, be completely 'down and out,' he might perhaps emerge later to real usefulness. It isn't right for a man to stand so long in the bright sunshine."

He spoke of the progressive party, "one of the most hopeful movements in your country, particularly because it was a western movement," and its absorption, as he described it, by Mr. Roosevelt. "And now the progressive party has less life in it than the others—Mr. Roosevelt should have stayed in Africa five years instead of six months. There should be times when the public can forget there is such a man—the capture of the progressive movement by a hero was one of the few things in your recent politics which seem to me definitely unfortunate."

This little scrap of current history is from the pen of Arthur Ruhf, special war correspondent for "The Gazette." It is significant because it shows the loyalty of our adopted citizenship, and because of the man's clear perception of American politics and our public men.

His estimate of Colonel Roosevelt and the progressive party is correct, and his analysis of the man who at one time was the most popular man in the nation, is true to the letter.

The progress party was in the brain of Senator Robert M. La Follette, and he is entitled to whatever it may contain in the way of merit. After foisting it on his own state he expected to use it as a stepping stone from the gubernatorial to the presidential chair. But Cummins and Brewster were troubled with similar aspirations and the movement, which he turned into a national party, required the essence of a great leader, and Colonel Roosevelt took advantage of the opportunity.

This, in a nutshell, is the history of the reform movement which swept over the country, stimulated by a great ballad of praise and thanksgiving, and closing with the doxology when democracy captured the prize in November.

Many deluded people believed that the millennium was about to dawn, and that the down-trodden and oppressed would be redeemed from torridity through the new party, under the management of its magnetic leader, but it was not to be.

The men who created the sentiment which gave the party birth, forsook the ship, refusing to be dominated by the man in command, and the cause suffered, in spite of all that the colonel could do to stem the tide.

Today the national progressive party is a byword, without the colonel, and his presence no longer inspires much confidence and enthusiasm, as was demonstrated at the recent Maine election. The man from Bulgaria was a disinterested spectator, but his impartial view of the situation is correct.

The thought was often expressed, during Colonel Roosevelt's last trip abroad, that if he could be induced to explore the jungles for the next five years, it would be a good thing for the country, and might not be a bad thing for the colonel.

America has never produced a character so unique, and so difficult to understand, as the character of the man who for eight years presided over the destinies of the nation, and was idolized by the people.

A man of big heart, and generous impulse, of rare intelligence and great ability, yet so selfish withal that he was ready to sacrifice his friends, and the party to which he owed allegiance, because it had made him what he was by honoring him with the highest office within the gift of the people.

Nothing but personal ambition can explain the man's attitude. Why he is not satisfied with the honors already conferred is a mystery which no one attempts to solve. That he will be a candidate for the presidency in 1916 there is but little doubt. Failing to capture the republican nomination, he will attempt to rally the scattered forces of the progressive party, and thus make certain the re-nomination of President Wilson.

It is yet too early to forecast the political situation with any degree of

THE BIBLE AND "LIBERAL EDUCATION."

At this time the annual bible classes are being formed in the churches and Y. M. C. A. Janesville is to have, next week, a notable bible conference, with a general attention, concerning adult bible study.

The latest issue of the Chicago Dial, the leading literary journal of our country, remarks: "An inexhaustible source of sinewy English, as has been repeatedly pointed out in the past, and will be, we hope, pointed out in the future, is the King James version of the bible. In the literature that is nearer in time than we are to the makers of that version, it is a pleasure to note the evidence of the biblical style upon the phraseology of many of the best writers."

A quotation is then given at random, from Isaac Walton's "Lives," replete with bible allusions, and the writer's comment is: "Why can we no longer write in this vigorous and at the same time picturesque fashion?"

"Mr. Joseph S. Audubach," he adds, "in a recent extended essay on 'The Bible in Modern Literature,' pleads for a return to the bible both as a book of religious truth and as a literary model. Incidentally he calls attention to Lincoln's well-known indebtedness to the scriptures for his strong and admirably idiomatic style as a writer and speaker. The Gettysburg oration, as he remarks, is 'sprinkled with words of bible memory' and 'phrases born of bible reading and bible inspiration.' Examples are given in remarkable number and abundance. 'Take these away and much of the solemn music has died out forever from this inspiring Battle Hymn of Consecration to the Republic.'"

Of one thing, however, there is no occasion for doubt. And that is that the republican party will be obliged to take into account the political ambitions of Theodore Roosevelt.

The party at the present time has no great national leader. The old guard has been so effectually retired, that no member of this sturdy crowd can be resurrected, and the new generation of statesmen has yet to develop a man of marked ability as a leader.

That the party has grown weary of strife and dissension, and is ready to take on an unreasonable compromise is already apparent, and Wisconsin, the most progressive of all the states, set the pace in the republican convention at Madison a few days ago. Emmanuel Philipp, the man who will be the next governor is the embodiment of conservatism. Francis McGovern, long recognized as one of La Follette's disciples and more recently, a progressive of the Bull Moose type, will succeed Isaac Stephenson in the United States senate.

These two men, so diametrically opposed to each other, are running for office on the same platform, and will campaign together. Why? Because harmony was the first and by far the largest consideration. This was the platform on which Philipp was nominated was sacrificed in so many ways, when the state platform was drafted.

Under ordinary circumstances the progressive epidemic would have run through another four years and then died a natural death, but the circumstances are not ordinary. The European war, with all its horrors, over-shadows us like a cloud, and causes us to do some sober thinking. In the light of this great catastrophe, our political squabbles sink into insignificance, and there is a general disposition on the part of the people to get together for mutual protection.

The republican party has back of it a history so closely interwoven in the nation's welfare that it commands respect and appreciation. All it needed was some great event to call the scattered forces together, and unless all signs fail it will be a strongly united party long before the next national election.

The man Roosevelt has often stated that he is no longer a republican, but he is, and when the time comes he will be asking for recognition. What the party will do with him or for him depends somewhat on his attitude. He is no longer the nation's idol, and the old party, which he served so long will demand evidences of contrition, and signs of a disposition to reform before the olive branch is freely extended.

The colonel is a versatile character and people are never surprised at what he does next. The Bulgarian traveler was not far afield in his estimate, but the American people know him better than the casual observer. The opportunity for him to redeem himself is before him and it remains to be seen whether he will be wise enough to improve it.

A candid comment would be a candid apology to his old friend, Taft, the man he selected for his successor, and then betrayed to gratify personal ambition. Several other deeds of penance will be required before the road to the presidential chair will be easy of access, but the colonel may be equal to the occasion. The next president ought to be a republican, and he will be if harmony continues to be the watchword.

Flood Scenes At Edgerton Following Monday's Storm

Edgerton, Sept. 19.—The damage and inconvenience caused by the heavy downpour of rain Monday afternoon and evening was considerable. A cloudburst occurred over the marsh near Albion and the sudden rush of water caused Saunders creek to rise 12 feet in 24 hours, reaching the highest water mark that has ever been recorded in Edgerton. Piles of lumber, straw, wagon boxes, tobacco racks and other articles went floating down the creek, some of them going through here and others caught and fastened to trees or posts. The abutments of the bridges on Swift and Main streets were partially washed away and the bridges condemned, the roads being blocked to traffic. Several hundred dollars' worth of damage was done by the flooding of cellars in that part of the city and the people are obliged to wear rubber boots if they step out side of their doors, the water being level with their porches.

Damage to a bridge this side of Stoutington crippled the train service badly, no train going through here Tuesday until 4:00 p. m.

DOINGS OF THE VAN LOONS—Yes, Indeed! Angeline Knows a Thing or Two—

BY F. LEIPZIGER

The Last Shot

By FREDERICK PALMER

(Copyright, 1914, by Charles Scribner's Sons)

Some four years previously, when a baby was in prospect for Minna, who wore no wedding ring, Mrs. Galland had been inclined to send the maid to an institution, "where they take good care of her, my dear. That's what such institutions are for. It is quite scandalous for her and for us—never happened in our family before!"

Marta arched her eyebrows.

"We don't know!" she exclaimed softly.

"How can you think such a thing, let alone saying it—you, a Galland!" her mother gasped in indignation.

"That is, if we go far back," said Marta. "At all events, we have no precedent, so let's establish one by keeping her."

"But for her own sake! She will have to live with her shame!" Mrs. Galland objected. "Let her begin afresh in the city. We shall give her a good recommendation, for she is really an excellent servant. Yes, she will readily find a place among strangers."

"Still, she doesn't want to go, and it would be cruel to send her away."

"Cruel! Why, Marta, do you think I would be cruel? Oh, very well, then we will let her stay!"

"Both are away at church. Mrs. Galland ought to be here any minute, but Miss Galland will be later because of her children's class," said Minna. "Will you wait on the veranda?"

He was saying that he would stroll in the garden when childish footsteps were heard in the hall, and after a curly head had nestled against the mother's skirts its owner, reminded of the importance of manners in the world where the stork had left her, made a curtsy. Lanstron shook a small hand which must have lately been on intimate terms with sugar or jam.

"How do you do, flying soldier man?" chirped Clarissa Eileen. It was evident that she held Lanstron in high favor.

"Let me hear you say your name," said Lanstron.

Clarissa Eileen was triumphant. She had been waiting for days with the revelation when he should make that old request. Now she enunciated it with every vowel and consonant correctly and primly uttered; indeed, she repeated it four or five times in proof of complete mastery.

"A pretty name. I've often wondered how you came to give it to her," said Lanstron to Minna.

"You do like it!" exclaimed Minna with girlish eagerness. "I gave her the most beautiful name I could think of because—she laid her hand caressingly on the child's head and a madonna-like radiance stole into her face—because she might at least have a beautiful name when—the dull blaze of a recollection now burning in her eyes—"when there wasn't much prospect of many beautiful things coming into her life; though I know, of course, that the world thinks she ought to be called Maggie."

Proceeding leisurely along the main path of the first terrace, Lanstron followed it past the rear of the house to the old tower. Long ago the most that surrounded the castle had been filled in. The green of rows of grape vines lay against the background of a mat of ivy on the ancient stone walls, which had been cut away from the loopholes set with window glass. The door was open, showing a room that had been closed in by a ceiling of boards from the walls to the circular stairway that ran aloft from the dungeons. On the floor of flags were chess rugs. A number of seed and nursery catalogues were piled on a round table covered with a brown cloth.

"Hello!" Lanstron called softly.

"Hello!" he called louder and yet louder.

Receiving no answer, he retraced his steps and seated himself on the second terrace in a secluded spot in the shadow of the first terrace wall, where he could see anyone coming on the main flight of steps from the road. When Marta walked she usually came from town by that way. At length the sound of a slow step from another direction broke on his ear. Some one was approaching along the path that ran at his feet. Around the corner of the wall, in his workman's Sunday clothes of black, but wearing his old straw hat, appeared Feller, the gardener. He paused to examine a rose bush and Lanstron regarded him thoughtfully.

As he turned away he looked up, and a glance of definite and unfaltering recognition was exchanged between the two men. They had the garden to themselves.

"Gustave!" Lanstron exclaimed under his breath.

"Lanny!" exclaimed the gardener, turning over a branch of the rose bush. He seemed unwilling to risk talking openly with Lanstron.

"You look the good workman in his Sunday best to a T!" said Lanstron.

"Being stone-deaf," returned Feller, with a trace of drollery in his voice, "I hear very well—at times. Tell me—his whisper was quivering with eagerness—"shall we fight? Shall we fight?"

"We are nearer to it than we have ever been in our time," Lanstron replied.

The hat still shaded Feller's face, his stoop was unchanged, but the branch in his hand shook.

"Honest?" he exclaimed. "Oh, the chance of it! The chance of it!"

"Gustave!" Lanstron's voice, still low, came in a gust of sympathy, and the pocket which concealed his hand gave a nervous twitch as if it held something alive and distinct from his own being. "The trial wears on you! Do you want to go?"

"No!" Feller shot back irritably. "No!" he repeated resolutely. "I don't want to go! I mean to be game—I!"

He shifted his gaze from the bush which he still pretended to examine and suddenly broke off with: "Miss Galland is coming!"

Lanstron started toward the steps that Marta was ascending. She moved leisurely, yet with a certain springy energy that suggested that she might have come on the run without being out of breath or seeming to have made an effort.

"Hello, stranger!" she called as she saw him, and quickened her pace.

"Hello, pedagogue!" he responded. As they shook hands they swung their arms back and forth like a pair of romping children for a moment.

"We had a grand session of the school this morning, the largest class ever!" she said. "And the points we scored off you soldiers! You'll find disarmament already in progress when you return to headquarters. We're irresistible, or at least," she added, with a flash of intensity, "we're going to be some day."

"So you put on your war-paint!"

"It must be the pollen from the hydrangeas!" She flicked her handkerchief from her belt and passed it to him. "Show that you know how to be useful!"

He performed the task with deliberate care.

"Heavens! You even have some on your ear and some on your hair; but I'll leave it on your hair; it's rather becoming. There you are!" he concluded. "Off my hair, too!"

"Very well. I always obey orders."

"I oughtn't to have asked you to do it at all!" she exclaimed with a sudden change of manner as they started up to the house. "But a habit of friendship, a habit of liking to believe in one's friends, was uppermost. I forgot. I oughtn't even to have shaken hands with you!"

"Marta! What now, Marta?" he asked.

He had known her in reproach, in anger, in laughing mockery, in militant seriousness, but never before like this. The pain and indignation in her eyes came not from the sheer hurt of a wound but from the hurt of its source. It was as if he had learned by the signal of its loss that he had a deeper hold on her than he had realized.

"Yes, I have a bone to pick with you," she said, recovering a grim sort of fellowship. "A big bone! If you're half a friend you'll give me the very marrow of it."

"I am ready!" he answered more pathetically than philosophically.

"There's not time now: after luncheon, when mother is taking her nap," she concluded as they came to the last step and saw Mrs. Galland on the veranda.

After luncheon Mrs. Galland kept battling with her nodes until nature was victorious and she fell fast asleep. Marta, grown restless with impatience, suggested to Lanstron that they stroll in the garden, and they took the path past the house toward the castle tower, stopping in an arbor with high hedges on either side around a statue of Mercury.

"Now!" exclaimed Marta narrowly. "It was you, Lanny, who recommended Feller to us as a gardener, competent though deaf! I have proved him to be a man of most sensitive hearing. I didn't let him know that he was discovered. You brought him here—you, Lanny, you are the one to explain."

"True, he is not deaf!" Lanstron replied.

"He is a spy?" she asked.

"Yes, a spy. You can put things in a bright light, Marta!" He found words coming with difficulty in face of the pain and disillusion of her set look.

"Using some man as a pawn; setting him as a spy in the garden where you have been the welcome friend!" she exclaimed. "A spy on what—on my mother, on Minna, on me, on the flowers, as a part of this monstrous game of trickery and lies that you are playing?"

There was no trace of anger in her tone. It was that of one mortally hurt. Anger would have been easier to bear than the measuring, penetrating wonder that found him guilty of such a horrible part. "Those eyes would have confused Partow himself with the steady, willing intensity of their gaze. She did not see how his left hand was twitching and how he stilled its movement by pressing it against the bench."

"You will take Feller with you when you go!" she said, rising.

Lanstron dropped his head in a kind of shaking throbb of his whole body and raised a face white with appeal.

"Marta!" He was speaking to a profile, very sensitive and yet like ivory. "I've no excuse for such an abuse of hospitality except the obsession of a loathsome work that some man must do and I was set to do. My God, Marta! I cease to be natural and human. I am a machine. I keep thinking, what if war comes and some error of mine let the enemy know where to strike the blow of victory; or if there were information I might have gained and failed to gain that would have given us the victory—if, because I had not done my part, thousands of lives of our soldiers were sacrificed needlessly!"

At that she turned on him quickly, her face softening.

"You do think of that—the lives?"

"Yes, why shouldn't I?"

"Of those on your side!" she exclaimed, turning away.

"Yes, of those first," he replied.

"And, Marta, I did not tell you why Feller was here because he did not want me to."

Dinner Stories

One afternoon a hobo meekly knocked at the back door of a prosperous looking home, and in the maid appeared he told her that he was dying of hunger.

"I am willing to give you something to eat," responded the maid, without any hysterical symptoms, "but you must earn it. Are you willing to do a little light work?"

"Yes, ma'am," replied the hobo, wearily sinking down on a bench, "anything to get bread."

"That room," said the maid, pointing to the kitchen, "is full of flies. Do you think you can kill them?"

"Yes, ma'am," replied the hobo, retaining his comfortable position on the bench. "Just let them come out here one by one."

At a dinner party De Wolf Hopper had finished his speech, and as he sat down a lawyer arose, shoved his hands deep into his trousers pockets—as was his habit—and laughingly inquired: "Doesn't it strike this company as a little unusual that a professional comedian should be funny?"

When the laughter that greeted this sally had subsided, De Wolf Hopper drew out: "Doesn't it strike this company as a little unusual that a lawyer should have his hands in his own pockets?"

A Glasgow merchant, famous for his stinkiness, came into his office one morning and found a young clerk writing a letter in rather a flourish. "My man," he observed, "dinner make the tails o' yer 's and 's quite-ease long. I want the ink tae last the quarter oot."

THE WORLD SET FREE

Europe's Armageddon and the Last War

By H. G. WELLS

Copyright, 1914, by H. G. WELLS

And then, since the American pressed his idea, the king contrived to shift the talk from the question of celebrating the epoch they were making to the question of the probabilities that lay ahead. Here every one became diffident. They could see the world unified at peace, but what detail was to follow from that unification they seemed indisposed to discuss. This diffidence struck the king as remarkable. He plunged into the possibilities of science. All the huge expenditure that had hitherto gone into unproductive naval and military preparations must now, he declared, place research upon a new footing. "Where one man worked we will have a thousand." He appealed to Holsten. "We have only begun to peep into these possibilities," he said. "You, at any rate, have sounded the vaults of the treasure house."

"They are unfathomable," smiled Holsten.

"Man," said the American, with a manifest resolve to justify and re-ignite himself after the flickering contradictions of the king, "man, I say, is only beginning to enter upon his heritage."

"Tell us some of the things you believe we shall presently learn, give us an idea of the things we may presently do," said the king to Holsten.

Holsten opened out vistas.

"Science," the king cried presently, "is the new king of the world."

"Our view," said the president, "is that sovereignty resides with the people."

"No," said the king, "the sovereign is a being more subtle than that. And less arithmetical. Neither my family nor your emancipated people. It is something that floats about us and above us and through us. It is that common, impersonal will and sense of necessity of which science is the best understood and most typical aspect. It is the mind of the race. It is that which has brought us here, which has bowed us all to its demands."

He paused and glanced down the table at Leblanc and then reopened at his former antagonist.

"There is a disposition," said the king, "to regard this gathering as if it was actually doing what it appears to be doing, as if we ninety odd men of our own free will and wisdom were uniting the world. There is a temptation to consider ourselves exceptionally fine fellows and masterful men and all the rest of it. We are not. I doubt if we should average out as anything sabler than any other casually selected body of ninety odd men. We are no creators; we are consequences. We are salvagers or salvages. The thing today is not ourselves, but the wind of conviction that has blown us hither."

The American had to confess he could hardly agree with the king's estimate of their average.

"Holsten, perhaps, and one or two others might lift us a little," the king conceded. "But the rest of us?"

His eye flitted once more toward Leblanc.

"Look at Leblanc," he said. "He's just a simple soul. There are hundreds and thousands like him. I admit a certain dexterity, a certain luck, but there is not a country town in France where there is not a Leblanc or so to be found about 2 o'clock in its principal cafe. It's just that he isn't complicated or super-mannish or any of those things that have made all he has done possible. But in happier times, don't you think, Wilhelm, he would have remained just what his father was—a successful epicure, very clean, very accurate, very honest? And on holidays he would have gone out with Mme. Leblanc and her knitting in a punt with a jar of something gentle and have sat under a large, reasonable, green lined umbrella and fished very neatly and successfully for gudgeon."

The president and the Japanese prince in spectacles protested together.

"If I do him an injustice," said the king, "it is only because I want to elucidate my argument. I want to make it clear how small are men and days and how great is man-in-comparison."

So it was King Egbert talked at Brasago after they had proclaimed the unity of the world. Every evening after that the assembly dined together and talked at their ease and grew accustomed to each other and sharpened each other's ideas, and every day they worked together and really for a time believed that they were inventing a new government for the world. They discussed a constitution. But there were matters needing attention too urgently to wait for any constitution. They attended to these incidentally. The constitution it was that waited. It was presently found convenient to keep the constitution waiting indefinitely, as King Egbert had foreseen, and meanwhile with an increasing self confidence that council went on governing.

On this first evening of all the council's gatherings, after King Egbert had talked for a long time and drunken and praised very abundantly the simple red wine of the country that Leblanc had procured for them, he gathered about him a group of congenial spirits and fell into a discourse upon simplicity, praising it above all things and declaring that the ultimate aim of art, religion, philosophy and science alike was to simplify. He instanced himself as a devotee to simplicity. And Leblanc he instanced as a crowning instance of the splendor of this quality. Upon that they were all agreed.

When at last the company about the tables broke up the king found himself brimming over with a peculiar affection and admiration for Leblanc. He made his way to him and drew him aside and broached what he declared was a small matter. There was, he said, a certain order in his gift that, unlike all other orders and decorations in the world, had never been corrupted. It was reserved only for elderly men of supreme distinction, the acuteness of whose gifts was already touched to mellowness, and it had included the greatest names of every age so far as the advisers of his family had been able to ascertain them. At present, the king admitted, these matters of stars and badges were rather obscured by more urgent affairs; for his own part he had never set any value upon them at all, but a time might come when they would be at least interesting, and, in short, he wished to confer the Order of Merit upon Leblanc.

His sole motive in doing so, he added, was his strong desire to signalize his personal esteem. He laid his hand upon the Frenchman's shoulder as he said these things with an almost brotherly affection. Leblanc received this proposal with a modest confusion that greatly enhanced the king's opinion of his admirable simplicity. He pointed out that, eager as he was to snatch at the proffered distinction, it might at the present stage appear invidious, and he therefore suggested that the conferring of it should be postponed until it could be made the crown and conclusion of his services. The king was unable to shake this resolution and the two men parted with expressions of mutual esteem.

Side Lights On The Circus Business

By
D. W. WATT

In 1878 which was my first year in the business, the show opened the season at Delavan, Wis., on May 3rd and closed at Oregon, Ill., on May 30th. While this made a short season, the show had to travel through the far west and far between. So while the season had not been a long one, it had been a hard tiresome one, and both the people and the horses, and nearly everything with the show was ready to hear of an early closing date.

George K. Steel, the advance agent, after leaving Oregon, Ill., for October 1st, took the show back to the east over the advisability of running one or two weeks longer. And while few of the people had winter jobs waiting them, there was one man with the show who had an engagement for the entire winter at the big hippodrome in New York city. At much more salary than he was getting with the circus, this man was in St. Louis, and as the hippodrome in New York had already opened, he was anxious to leave the circus close as early as possible. Finally, then, it upon him, he said to take up an early closing date in the dressing room among all the performers.

For had written a new chorus to his song and rehearsed it in the dressing room with the other performers, who always surrounded him when he was singing, and all would join in the chorus. It went something like this:

"The season has been a long one, and we will all go home from Oregon."

"Well, all go home from Oregon." But unbeknown to poor Pete, the performers had gotten together and changed the chorus, and when it came for him to sing and ask them all to join the chorus, much to Conklin's surprise, the chorus all sang, "We won't go home from Oregon."

This took him to his surprise that he fell off of his pedestal, and here the song ended at the conclusion of one verse, but this was simply to have a little bit of a surprise. The next day, Burr Robins and George K. Steel, concluded that the show would close the season at Oregon.

From here, Grove across the country to Harvard, where we went into camp over night, and reached the show's headquarters the next day. And although this was a short season, it was one of the most profitable that the show had ever seen, and in five months and ten days that it was on the road, it cleared up more than $30,000, which was more than twice the value of the show.

This simply goes to show the money that is possible for even a small show to make, that is well managed.

For many years back there has been seven Ringling Brothers connected with their great shows, but up to a few years ago, there were but five of them who were the owners.

August and Henry up to a few years ago were both salaried men and had no interest in the show. As he was known around the show, was the first of the brothers to die. He was connected with the advance all his life, and no one knew the country and the work ahead of the show better than he. He died some five or six years ago, and a few years ago Otto, another one of the brothers who had always owned an equal interest with the other brothers, also died.

In Otto's will, he provided for the widow and orphan of his brother Gus, after which he willed his entire interest in the show to his brother Henry, who had always been a salaried man. So today there is still five of the Ringlings interested in the two great shows.

But like many other brothers their ideas of home and country in which they wanted to stay, differed. John, who has always been the chief agent ahead of the show, divides his time between his home in New York City and Ringlingville and Montana. Alfred G. built a beautiful home in New York, where he spends most of his time in the winter. Charles, who was the only one of the Ringlings here with the show this season, built a beautiful home in Evanston, Ill. Henry the youngest brother lives in a handsome home of his own at Wilmet, another northshore suburb of Chicago.

So the only one of the brothers who has stuck to the old home town, is Albert, the oldest. Here he built one of the handsomest residences in the state, which is kept very neat and airy, and is always in charge of the servants in the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Ringling. While these boys started in the business in a small way, they were never what might be called trailers in the business or copying after any one else, but at ways had original high class ideas of their own which they carried out to the letter, and always kept close watch on the public's interest, and giving them everything that they promised.

These high class spectacular productions which they have been giving for several years back, were original with them, and they spared no time or money in these productions. The way of music, paintings, and wardrobe for the same. In the production of Joan of Arc two years ago, the paintings and wardrobe alone cost more money than many of the small shows of today. The production this year of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, was even more expensive than the one of Joan of Arc, but the cost was never taken into consideration.

This has been a season of misfortune, accidents, and elements, catastrophes thus far indeed, but contemplate what have fire, water and wind have brought up to date: Ringlings lost 42 cars in a fire at Cleveland; Sells-Fliegel lost a net and money by washouts; Hagenbeck-Wallace suffered several blow-downs in Michigan, Illinois and Missouri; Rice & Dore, blown by cyclones in Cleveland; World a Home blown down and other accidents; Hall's London Hippodrome Shows washed out by heavy rains, and the Old Dominion Circusmen decided to leave Canada in fact almost every show has suffered more or less injury, but the above were the heaviest victims, 1914 will, therefore, be remembered—but it hasn't ended yet. Times are picking up; optimism pervades all business, and much money can be gathered before the snow birds grow too thick upon the white-mantled meadows.

On Thursday evening of this week, there was a reunion held in front of the hotel Myers, at which only five of the old veterans answered to the roll call. Now, these were no veterans of the war of the rebellion, neither were they of the Spanish-American variety, but they were veterans of the wagon show days of 1880.

Those who answered to the roll call were of Bingham, of Bingham & Cable, who are now playing a musical engagement at the Apollo theatre in this city. Cash Williams, who for many years has been manager of Hard's hotel at Lake Koshkonong, Lem Williams, who for some years has been connected with the George Hatch orchestra, of this city, A. Smith, and D. W. Watt.

Thursday evening was the first time in 34 years that these five had met together. And a long talk of the hardships of the wagon show days, was enjoyed.

One member of the company said: "You talk of the rough riders of today, and of the wild west shows of the past, but when you think of the rough riding that we had to do over the rough roads of southern Illinois, for it was in that state that the show traveled for nearly four months of the year. Many stories were told of different ones that had long been forgotten by the others. And while the meeting only lasted for a short time, it was enjoyed by every one, and when the parting came it was with hope that they might all live to enjoy another reunion."

MILTON GIRL TELLS OF STEERAGE TRIP

ELEANOR BROWN WRITES ACCOUNT OF HER ARDUOUS JOURNEY ACROSS THE ATLANTIC.

EXPERIENCE ENJOYED

Passengers Herded in Close Quarters Display Real Picnic Spirit—American Indians for Companions.

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE)

Milton, Sept. 19.—Eleanor Brown, who has just returned from Europe, writes the second account of her trip as follows:

"I was so glad, so far as we know your boat is likely to sail, but keep in touch with us; it may be taken off at any time."

That was the cheerful news I received at the International Merchant Marine in London. Needless to say I kept "in touch," though it meant standing in line (in a "queue" the English call it), for hours, on account of the large number of people who were waiting to keep in touch. We tried getting down to the office when it opened, but often found from one to two hundred like minded travelers before us. We tried waiting for notification of our acquaintance had failed to receive important news that way, we went to the "queue." It all the time that all the Americans would be added up, the total would be in the hundreds.

Another place of meeting was the Savoy Hotel, where the generous and devoted committee of American business men worked heroically many hours each day to fix out our difficulties, and when needed, they gave us loans. Several thousand tourists received financial assistance during the first three weeks, before the first of the month. It was a trying time, at best, for it is not pleasant to be without money in a strange country, but it would have been infinitely worse without the splendid work of the American committee and the kind assistance of the faithful American Express, which cashed travelers' checks everywhere at full value as soon as the prolonged bank holiday was over.

Five days before my boat was to sail, upon inquiring as usual, I found that in order to take it I must transfer myself to Antwerp, then a most dangerous place to be. The "American Express" advised me to have nothing to do with such an enterprise. However, I did not want to decide, for within the next few minutes I learned that the steamer had been taken over altogether. That was a poser for all first and second class passengers on other boats were already engaged up to the middle of October, two months ahead. It was one of the questions I waited so long, so with fear and trembling I decided upon a steerage passage on a ship carrying the American flag. We were told that except for a little crowding and social inconveniences, wholesome food, the accommodations would be entirely satisfactory. Certainly the company was good, as good as ever sailed—on any boat of any class. We sailed at 10 o'clock and went down in terrific humor, our luggage in taxicabs, to enjoy our novel experience. It amused us when we found that we were to have our eyes examined like ordinary steerage passengers, and lowered when they asked ladies to remove their gloves and the men their hats as we passed the doctor. What we could not quite understand was the presence of a large number of people who were not in the joke—who spoke no language we could understand, who wore no gloves, and whose eyes had to be examined carefully. We noted a party of American Indians from a wild west show, Americans, but odd cabin companions. But companions we all proved to be, most intimate, even to the prospective sharing of roller towels in the "wash room" which was the only toilet convenience provided. At the request of the Americans the company and the urgent demand of ourselves, we were given the run of the upper decks. And a unique voyage we had of it. Before we landed, we were sleeping on the deck at night and picking them up by day. The library and smoking room were full every night. I shall never forget a party who established themselves on the rear deck with camp chairs, and were in water from which they lunched during the entire run, the supply of food being mysteriously renewed when required—by the assistance of the ravens, very likely.

The passengers had varied experiences to relate. There were ladies who had left Bremen on the last North German Lloyd steamer, which had been twelve days skulking about after war was declared, unable, either to return or proceed to a European port. A girl had been prisoner of war on a German boat in an English harbor for three days. We had several Germans who could not return to their own country, and were now stranded in England; so the war was a tabooed topic at table.

At quarantine, when the papers came on with the news of the critical situation in Paris, it was a great surprise, for we had no wireless news of the fighting, and in view of the French situation the sight of the Statue of Liberty brought tears to our eyes, tears of gratitude for our own safe return, and of pity and sympathy for France.

It is hard to realize here that the most terrible war for centuries is going on. But we have seen things we can never forget. The English people are reconciled in the feeling that this war may result in the establishment of a lasting peace; they hope for the neutralization of the sea and dream of a general disarmament of nations. One of the wonderful sights was a service in St. Paul's Cathedral, the immense floor space was entirely and long before service time. Not a quarrel of the people could hear the preacher's voice even, but they could recite together very earnestly and solemnly the prayers of peace, and they sang with enormous impressiveness, "O God, Our Help in Ages Past" and "God Save the King." England seems to be going into the war in a sort of crusading spirit. May their best hopes be realized.

VAUDEVILLE SEASON OPENS AT THE MYERS

Three Headliner Acts Start Off Season, Playing to a Packed House.

Loud applause was given and repeated encores demanded from each of the three vaudeville acts which opened the first night of the vaudeville season at the Myers last evening. Judging from the satisfaction evinced by the audience the show was a success.

Francis Le Maître and her partner appeared in a novel roller skating and bicycle act that is both graceful and difficult.

Knight & Benson who were billed to appear as Novelty Entertainers—the kind you like to see—scored a hit with their parody on grand opera. Both have good voices and responded to several encores.

Carroll Keating & Fay have a highly original skit entitled "At Crow's Nest Inn." They all have good voices and their comedy is clean, clever and decidedly new.

A full orchestra added to the evening's entertainment.

"The Treys O' Hearts." The fourth episode of their exciting mystery drama, "The Treys O' Hearts," shown on the screen last night, it was full of thrilling scenes and situations. It is impossible to tell ahead of the filmed story what is going to happen. One's curiosity is thus kept at the highest pitch and popularity results for the picture.

The printed story appears in The Gazette Saturday evenings and an installment can be found tonight in another part of the paper.

AMUSEMENTS

AT THE APOLLO.

"The Brute." Malcolm Williams, one of the foremost character delineators on the American stage, makes his initial appearance in motion pictures in "The Brute," a great and vital drama of today and all the time, which will be presented at the Apollo next Monday.

"The Brute" is a powerful portrayal of the world-old conflict of the sexes, as old as the hills, yet as new as tomorrow's dawn. It is a tense drama of the clash of wills between a strong man, and a haughty, avaricious woman, the climax of which hangs in the balance until the man, in righteous indignation, exerts his full physical strength toward the subjugation of the woman. How he asserts his supremacy, and eventually conquers and forgives his mercenary and willful wife is vividly portrayed in the further development and finale of this exciting realistic drama.

"Lights of London." On Sunday in addition to three very good acts is offered a thrilling melodrama, "Lights of London" in 5 parts.

"Home Sweet Home." On Wednesday a mammoth Griffith film will be presented in six parts. D. W. Griffith has the reputation of the world's greatest director and to

Talk to LOWELL

Like most people you have a somewhat vague idea that the process of wiring a house for electricity involves a great deal of muss and trouble—that the walls must be opened, carpets lifted, furniture moved and the hard wood floors cut and hopelessly disfigured.

Nothing could be more erroneous. Your home can be completely wired in a very short time by our able wireman—Who knows how—without the slightest muss, dirt or bother. He'll leave your house without the slightest damage and with everything in perfect order.

We take great pride in rendering first class wiring service and a trial will convince you.

Call either phone and a representative will call and explain our wiring proposition.

BOTH PHONES. JANESVILLE, WIS.

A Two-Story Bungalow—By John Henry Newson.

"Home of Character, No. 152"

Wide siding and shingles are combined on the exterior of this house and the roof can be in shingles or slate, as desired.

The long living room across the front with ingle-nook seat and fireplace in the corner make an attractive feature; the dining room, pantry and kitchen all being in the rear.

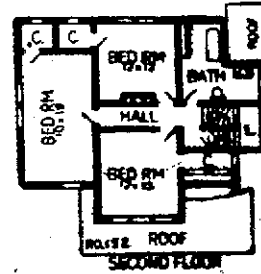

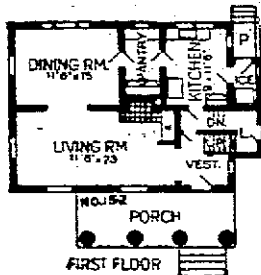

Three bedrooms and large bath occupy the second floor, and each room is provided with a large closet. Additional rooms can be provided in the attic if desired.

The basement extends under the entire house and hot air furnace and complete plumbing equipment are provided.

This is an inexpensive house to build, on account of the compact plan and the fact that considerable room is gained on the second floor by extending the front bedroom over the porch, and should be built in most localities for about $3000. Size 35x24 feet.

Inquiries answered if addressed to "John Henry Newson," care Homes of Character Dept., The Gazette. Always give number of house.

Stories of European War Gleaned By Associated Press Paris-London Correspondents

(Note: The following intimate accounts of various phases in the European struggle were prepared and sent out by the Associated Press.)

Sept. 19.—The principal sources of really graphic information of operations at the front are, for the moment, accounts given by returning wounded and prisoners and by private letters.

They all go to show that the worst predictions as to the bloody character of the war are being fulfilled.

The ravages in the German ranks are due in part, it is declared, to furious charges with the bayonet, but mostly to the 75 millimeter guns.

A German officer, interviewed on his way to one of the interior military prisons, declared "The French cannon isn't a war cannon, it's a butchery cannon."

One of the latest battles at Ramdilliers in the Vosges was fought on the edge of a forest between two regiments of infantry supported by artillery, and so fierce became the fire on both sides that the two regiments were obliged to retire at the same time, leaving the field to grape and canister.

From the Sergeant Aviator Decaen it is learned that the six German flying machines succumbed to musketry fire at the Luxembourg frontier.

"We are in France for the moment," he writes, "and the Germans are retreating, burning Belgian villages as they pass. Gastinger, on a Belgian aeroplane, came back from the frontier with a ball in his back; fortunately the German bullets don't seem to do much damage; this one was stopped by a leaf of broad. Our squadron's going ahead and, very soon, a letter dated Berlin."

Letter From Brigadier.

The following letter from a brigadier of dragoons is a specimen of a certain class of letters that have begun to arrive in Paris:

"My Dear Parents: If you receive this letter it will be because I have been killed, but don't weep for me, since my fate will have been the noblest a Frenchman can dream of, to die for his country on the eve of victory. We shall be the victors because we have right and confidence on our side. I shall have done my duty to the end and I hope my death will have been useful to my country. My last thoughts will be for you."

With this letter there came another from the cure of a little Belgian village giving the details of the death of the writer of the above. It was in a Belgian forest that a party of dragoons were surprised by an ambush and all shot down excepting three and on these three the Prussians rushed to complete their work. The brigadier, already wounded in the leg, managed master his pain and charged alone, and the cure adds that there was other than French blood shed upon the field.

"His body is not lost," the cure continues: "it reposes in the little cemetery of our village where you will come to visit the tomb after the war."

A letter from a lieutenant to his wife in Paris reads:

"We were in the first rank with our lieutenant Jean Ebrard at the head. He received six bullets. First wounded in the thigh, he got up, collected his men and went on ahead. Another ball struck him in the shoulder and four others were stopped by his knapsack. He found another later in his belt. 'Precious souvenir,' he said. He went to have his wounds dressed, on returning to the place of assembling. There's a sample of the conduct of our officers."

Problem of Prisoners.

London, Sept. 19.—The number of "alien enemies" in the United Kingdom, which is estimated at from 50,000 to 80,000 including women and children, daily becomes a matter of more concern.

Most of the better class have obtained police permits to remain at liberty, reporting at stated times to the police stations. Of these many continue in employment, but the discharging of clerks, teachers, government servants and servants of German or Austrian birth is becoming more common as the war feeling grows.

The women, who are required to register with the police, are supported by charitable funds out of the 200,000 marks appropriated by the German government for the relief of subjects in England. But the vast majority of unemployed and penniless, who are a charge on society and a source of concern to the police, have been gathered into various detention camps.

At one of these camps at Aldershot there are over 2,000 inmates. They live in a tent city within a barbed wire enclosure. As an extra inducement to remain inside the barbed wire, the prisoners are deprived of their shoes. Other large camps are at Liverpool and Manchester. It is expected that the prisoners will soon be put to work in the fields, just as all the detained aliens have in Germany.

In the great steel and glass pavilion known as the Olympia, where fashion and nobility gathered for the annual military tournament and the horse show recently, Austrians and Hungarians are detained.

The prisoners have plenty of space for exercise, which takes generally the form of children's games. They run after each other and shout like boys in a play yard.

Although the prisoners look the worse for lack of baths and laundries, they are for the larger part of the foreign riff-raff of London and are anything but discontent at having a day of liberty with three meals included.

To Ideal Capital.

Paris, Sept. 19.—Bordeaux, the city to which the French government has been removed, has the aspect of a royal seat of government, rather than a republic. It resembles Versailles. The desire to build a grandiose city is everywhere in evidence. The streets are broad, the squares spacious, and the buildings of large proportion, yet the 250,000 inhabitants of the city are insufficient to give it the appearance of a populous center. Bordeaux could easily shelter a population three times as large.

Bordeaux is situated on the left bank of the Garonne, which forms a magnificent harbor some 60 miles to the southeast of the mouth of the river. It is 353 miles from Paris. Not only is it easy of access, but it is favorably placed for communication with other parts of France and with Spain. For the first time in its history it now becomes the provisional capital of France. During the Franco-German war of 1870-71 the government was transferred thither from Paris, and remained there until the conclusion of peace.

Wish to Return.

London, Sept. 19.—The assorted company which presents itself at the headquarters of the American Residents' Relief Committee resembles a congress of nations. Negroes, Japanese, Chinese, Hindus and Arabs are among those who show papers proving themselves citizens of the United States and who are trying to get home.

The first rush of applicants for aid was made up chiefly of tourists, but who were delighting Austrian crowds with their productions of Custers Last Stand, came to grief at Libach, where the circus with which they were engaged was forced to disband, and after several weeks of interviews with German and Austrian officials, who were suspicious of the redmen, they finally made their way to London with tales of pioneer days in Wyoming.

Only by putting on all their feathers and war paint were the Indians able to establish their identity. In ordinary clothing they had nothing but trouble and merely progressed from one jail or compound to another. But buckskin suits decorated with beads and crowns of turkey feathers stamped them as real Americans and speeded their passage.

Aid Survivors.

London, Sept. 19.—The proposition of instituting a distinctive form of mourning to be worn by the relatives of British soldiers and sailors killed in the war has attracted much attention.

Several titled ladies have interested themselves in the subject, but the form which the mourning should take is still undecided.

A Red Cross worker writing to Queen Mary's Needlework Guild suggested that all towns and villages organize local committees of women to gather black clothing, used but in good condition, to be distributed among poor mourners who lose relatives in their country's service.

The writer said, in answer to another proposal, would be to entail further hardships upon the poor. "The average rich person," she said, "hasn't the slightest idea of the enormous importance that working women attach to mourning. They will even starve themselves and their children to obtain money for its purchase. To urge them to dispense with mourning at such a time would add a sting to the horrors of death."

She suggested that Mourning Supply Committee furnish men and children relatives with a black band bearing a miniature Union Jack.

Dentists to Aid.

London, Sept. 19.—So many men who want to enlist in the army have been refused because of their defective teeth, that fifty American and English dentists have volunteered to remedy conditions.

Each of the fifty dentists has agreed to treat without cost the teeth of fifty men whose physical condition is such that they will be acceptable as recruits when their dental shortcomings are removed.

Worth It.

"I understand that tenor keeps his voice in order by swallowing glycerin, menthol, camphor and oil of cinnamon," said the musician. "Great Scott!" replied the ordinary individual. "No wonder he insists on such high wages!"
